Case concerning the Maritime Delimitation between Peru and Chile before the International Court of Justice

I The International Court of Justice and the Pacific Settlement of Disputes

The International Court of Justice (ICJ) is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. Peru has brought the case to this Court in order for it to establish the maritime boundary between Peru and Chile.

The option of recurring to the International Court of Justice constitutes a pacific means of settling legal disputes between States. Therefore, submitting this case to the decision of the ICJ represents an option for peace.

II The conclusion of the Maritime Dispute with Chile: Its resolution favors the enhancement of Bilateral Relations and Integration

Solving the dispute regarding the maritime boundary with Chile will allow both countries to strengthen even further the important economic, commercial, social, cultural and political relations, taking advantage of the complementarity that exists between them.

The highest authorities of Peru and Chile have manifested their willingness to comply with and execute the ruling of the Court, regardless of the outcome.

III Nature of the dispute: Lack of an Agreement on Maritime Delimitation

On January 16, 2008, Peru brought the case before the Court by filing an Application instituting proceedings against Chile in the case concerning the maritime delimitation between both countries, requesting the Court to determine the following:

1 The course of the boundary between the maritime zones of the two States in accordance with International Law

1.1 The subject of the legal dispute refers to the delimitation of the maritime zones of both States due to the absence of a maritime delimitation agreement.

1.2 Chile, based on the 1952 Santiago Declaration and the 1954 Agreement relating to a Special Maritime Frontier Zone, argues that the two States have agreed on a maritime boundary that begins on the coast and continues along the geographical parallel that passes through Boundary Marker No. 1 of the common land border. However, neither the 1952 Declaration nor the 1954 Agreement contain any agreement concerning the maritime delimitation.

1.3 Chile also claims that the maritime boundary agreement with Peru has been confirmed through the practice of both parties. Peru, however, has never accepted the existence of a maritime boundary. Furthermore, the establishment of a permanent maritime boundary is a matter of grave importance and agreement is not easily to be presumed, as has been stated in the jurisprudence of the International Court of Justice.

1.4 Due to the lack of an agreement on maritime delimitation, Peru has requested the Court to draw the maritime boundary in accordance with the principles and rules of international law.

1.5 In accordance with the aforementioned principles and rules of international law, in the absence of an agreement between both States and the lack of special circumstances such as the presence of islands in the area, an equidistant line from the coasts of both countries is to be drawn in order to achieve an equitable solution. The Court will consider the arguments and evidence submitted by the parties to establish a final maritime boundary.

THE EQUIDISTANCE LINE

1.6 Peru has also stated that the maritime boundary must be drawn from "Point Concordia", which is the point where the land border between Peru and Chile reaches the sea, as defined by the 1929 Lima Treaty and the Final Act of the 1929-1930 Joint Demarcation Commission [See ▲] Chile's position is that the starting point of the maritime boundary is located at the point where the parallel that passes through Boundary Marker No. 1 reaches the low-tide line. 2 Peru possesses exclusive sovereign rights over the maritime area situated within 200 nautical miles of its coast but more than 200 nautical miles from Chile's coast

2.1 Peru has requested the Court to recognize its exclusive sovereign rights in the maritime area situated within 200 nautical miles from its coast and beyond 200 miles off the coast of Chile ("the outer triangle"). Chile considers it as high seas and has even developed the thesis of the "Presential Sea", a concept incompatible with the rules of international law, which has been used by Chile to attribute itself certain rights in that area.

THE OUTER TRIANGLE: area situated within 200 nautical miles from Peru and beyond 200 nautical miles from Chile coasts, which that country considers "high seas"

2.2 Peru bases its argument on the principle of international law under which all coastal states are entitled to an adjacent maritime domain up to a distance of 200 nautical miles from their coasts.

IV Procedure and judgment of The International Court of Justice

V The judgment of the Court as the triumph of an "option for peace" The ICJ as an Organ of the United Nations System

Peru is pleased with the fact that the entire proceeding before the International Court of Justice has been carried out in an atmosphere of cooperation and serenity with Chile.

The judgments of the Court are binding, final and without appeal for the parties concerned. It must be pointed out that the judgements of the Court, applying international law, contribute in the preservation of peace, which is the main goal of the United Nations System to which it belongs.

VI Compliance with the Judgment

Member States, as parties of the United Nations Charter, must comply with the judgments of the Court on the cases they have brought before it or those cases where the Court has declared that it has jurisdiction to decide.

Article 94 of the United Nations Charter lays down that "each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party".
