Title	Culturally Sensitive Material Statement and Process

UBC Library is committed to respecting the values and spiritual beliefs of the cultures represented in its digital collections. We are aware that our digital collections may contain representations of items that are important to the originating communities, and continue to affect the values and beliefs of those communities. We recognize that these digital objects may embody cultural rights, values, knowledge, and ideas which are not owned or possessed by the library, but are retained by the originating communities.

Where concerns exist on the part of originating communities, we are always open to engage in discussions about digital objects, and ask that you contact us if you have questions about culturally sensitive materials in Open Collections. Please identify the item by its DOI or Open Collections URL. In addition, please provide information about your concern and your relationship to the originating community, along with your name and email address or phone number. Our Head, Digital Programs and Services will meet with relevant librarians and staff to discuss your concern, and will respond to outline the steps we have taken or to invite you to discuss the issue further.
