

A EXAMPLE:

You give a dinner party at your apartment. More people showed up than you expected.

Your neighbor, who just arrived, approaches you and asks: Do you have a spare chair I could borrow?

You do not, in fact, have a spare chair, but you do have the following items: a broom, a TV armchair, a drum throne, a ladder and a kitchen table.

You deliberate your response as follows. The practical goal of the questioner is to sit down at the dinner table. For this purpose, the most useful object from the list of available items is the stool.

So you say: No, I don't have a spare chair, but you can have the stool.

YOUR TURN:

Your friend is having a sleepover with some friends on the weekend. They are preparing everything for hosting the guests since they don't host many guests very often. You have that following items at home that you could spare for some time: a sleeping bag, a pillow, some bubble wrap and a carpet.

Your roommate is moving to another apartment and is packing her things. She has a large mirror that she needs to pack for transportation. You have that following items at home that you could spare for some time: some bubble wrap, a pillow, a sleeping bag and a carpet.

Your friend / She asks: Do you have a blanket? You reply:

one-shot...

expl. QA

Do you have a blanket?

B

mirror transport <--> sleepover

zero-shot

one-shot
expl

one-shot
QA

one-shot
expl.+ QA
(CoT)

human context 1

context 2
(transport) (sleepover)

human /
zero-shot