Nuclear Power

The emotional hang-ups that have longed plagued the development and expansion of nuclear power are receding. The radiation emissions from both the 1979 Three Mile Island and 2011 Fukushima disasters were minimal, less than the exposure you'd get from a long-distance airline flight. The Chernobyl debacle came from bad design and Soviet government cover-ups.

Europe is quickly shedding its allergies to this source

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) imposes ludicrous and unnecessary rules. For example, its radiological exposure standards are 100 times stricter than EPA rules for air pollution exposure. The NRC's process for approving new designs is mind-numbingly complex. It took one company six years to get the green light for an SMR design. Another notable SMR project was canceled because of regulatory foot-dragging.

Congress has mandated that the NRC update its rules to reflect the realities of today, not of decades ago. But typical of a hidebound government bureaucracy, the NRC's changes make things worse.

In developing innovations, there is the concept of the so-called learning rate. As you work on a project, you constantly come across better ways of doing things. But the NRC and other regulators have smothered the traditional learning process in the building of nuclear facilities.

It has been calculated that if the normal learning rate had been allowed, the cost of nuclear power would be 10% of what it is today.

Chef German Rizzo and his wife, Kristin, have created a simple delight with Mediterranean-influenced small tasting plates and tapas-style dishes. The menu is separated into Garden, Board, Butcher, Sea and Carb. The millefeuille of aubergine is luscious layers of eggplant, tomato, creamy burrata and basil. The mushroom tart has mushrooms swimming in a Parmigiano fondue. The brisket croquette is filled with mascarpone and brisket on a bed of apple compote. The med paelle—no small plate—can be ordered with chorizo and all sorts of fish, clams and mussels on a bed of saffron rice. All pastas are made in house. The welcome and service are enthusiastic.

MO Lounge
Mandarin Oriental hotel, 80 Columbus Circle, at 60th St. (Tel.: 212-825-8820)

Yes, the view is a stunner: The lounge space looks out from a privileged 35th-floor aerie over Columbus Circle on 59th Street. But the cream-colored, crescent-shaped all-day service space feels like a stopgap rather than a well-considered substitute for the Mandarin's now-shuttered fine-dining space. Surprisingly, given Mandarin Oriental's generally high standards, everything from the impersonal reception to the lackluster waitstaff to the room-service-priced comfort food (the $39 hamburger, for example, or the $32 burrata) seems phased-in and fatigued.

Le Crocodile
Wythe Hotel, 80 Wythe Ave., between N 11th & N 12th streets, Brooklyn, NY (Tel.: 718-460-8904)
