PERRONET HOUSE Hollywood star drops in for tea

FILM star Daryl Hannah made a special visit to South London.

The Blade Runner and Kill Bill actor took time out from a promotional trip to meet the guerrilla gardener of Elephant & Castle.

Ms Hannah was impressed after hearing of Richard Reynolds' activities in sprucing up the borough's eyesores and wanted to meet him.

Richard, who has fought battles with council bosses to get green areas to Southwark, was shocked to see the screen idol at his flat in Perronet House last Friday.

He said: "I couldn't believe it when I got the call and someone said Daryl wanted to pop round and meet me."

"She was really down to earth, nice and as beautiful as I remember from her films. She wanted to know a lot about guerrilla gardening and our activities."

Richard showed Ms Hannah the lavender beds that his group had covertly planted in the road barrier on Westminster Bridge Road, Lambeth.

The actor has a history of promoting eco-living and was in the capital to promote ethical investment to city traders.

Ms Hannah has also chained herself to a tree in her native Los Angeles to protect a green area from developers wanting to build hundreds of houses.

Richard added: "Someone joked that she would feel at home at the Elephant & Castle after starring in Blade Runner."

"When she was posing for the pictures nobody even noticed who she was."

"We had a cup of tea and she stayed for about half an hour. Daryl had a camera and was filming our chat for her blog and left me her email address and phone number, so hopefully she might visit again."

Richard earned the title of Southwark's guerrilla gardener after coming to blows with council bosses when residents in Perronet House were charged for more than a year for gardening costs, despite him doing the work for free.

He has also carried out night-time raids to make areas green and is selling the lavender from nearby Lambeth to raise funds for his movement.
